We appreciate your understanding and continued support as we work to provide meals for our students.

Holiday Learning Update from the Assistant Principal

Dear Families,

Happy almost-holiday season! As your Assistant Principal and unpaid holiday morale officer, I come bearing one simple request: keep those curious little brains of ours humming during the break — preferably with learning, occasionally with glitter, and never with boredom.

Here are a few tiny, doable ideas (no teaching degree required):

- The Mystery Ingredient Reading Challenge
 Read one recipe aloud together and let your child predict what will happen. If it turns into a cookie, science was successful. If it turns into a cookie-shaped life lesson, even better.
- Two-Minute Math, Big Impact
 Ask your child to estimate the number of ornaments on the tree, then count a section and multiply — instant math magic and room for proud approximation.
- Family "Show and Teach" Time
 Swap 10 minutes of screen time for a 10-minute mini-lesson: your kid teaches you a game; you teach them an old trick. Everyone gains a skill and someone gains the spotlight.
- Postcard Project
 Encourage kids to send one holiday postcard (paper or digital) describing the oddest fact they learned this week. Bonus: grandparents get delighted and writing muscles get a workout.
- Tiny Experiments—Big Smiles
 Try a safe kitchen science activity (baking soda volcano, floating egg). Take a photo, write one sentence about what happened, and voilà — science + documentation.
